POETRY.

ORIGINAL.

'Tis sweet to hear the thrushes gladome lay
When the last sunbeams on the clouds repose—
To hear when village discords die away,
The lonely whippoorwill, at evening's close.
Sweet is an evening ramble with the fair,
O'er the green pastures—by the water-side—
When the last woodland coral fills the air,
And the pale moon-beam sports upon the tide.

But sweeter far, the memory of the past,
The bright illusions of a former year—
When not a cloud our fancies o'ercast,
And grief was buried with the falling tear.

Ability and Get-along-ity.—There is a wide difference between ability and get-along-ity. The former savours more of genius—the latter, of cunning. The surest test of ability is the manner in which one accomplishes whatever he seriously undertakes—yet an individual may successfully accomplish great undertakings, without possessing a common share of get-along-ity. How well soever he may make a speech or write a book, or give advice, how ingeniously soever he may be in his mechanical, literary or controversial pursuits, if he does not make all that he undertakes profitable to his pecuniary interest, he proves himself deficient in that kind of ability which is termed get-along-ity—and which is the most respectable of all kinds of talents. Get-along-ity is possessed in the highest degree by those individuals who have no predilection for any particular pursuit; who can as easily and as willingly turn their attention to one thing as another; who are perfectly willing to conform to circumstances; who have more selfishness than enthusiasm or benevolence, and who are governed in all their actions by a prudential regard to their interest. Are such individuals generally possessed of the highest ability? Men of great ability are the very reverse of this. They are men who have a strong predilection for some particular pursuit; who are willing to sacrifice their interest for the sake of accomplishing a desirable object; they are men of enthusiasm which banishes from their minds all considerations of self. Are such individuals ever possessed of a common share of get-along-ity?

Two Characters.—Honorus is an honorable and intelligent man, and Sneak—as his name implies—is a mean sneaking sort of a fellow. Yet if these two men were travelling together—there is so much rustic simplicity in the manners of the former, and so much polished dignity in the manners of the latter—that, at first, Honorus would be invariably mistaken for Sneak, and Sneak for Honorus. There is so much genteel self-complacency in the manners of Sneak—he expresses so much reverence for every thing which the world admires, and so much contempt for every thing which the world despises—that strangers cannot resist the conviction, that he is an extraordinary man. On the other hand, there is so much rusticity in the manners of Honorus, and he seems so little inclined to second the fine sentiments which are uttered by his companion, whom he knows and despises, that he is mistaken for a mean fellow, who is not worthy to unloose the latchet of his companion's shoes. A familiar acquaintance with both, soon unfolds the noble qualities of the despised, and causes the admired to retire into the snail-shell of his real insignificance.

English and French Sailors.—The cause of the superiority of the English over the French in their naval engagements, is the superior discipline maintained among the English sailors, rather than the greater courage or skill of the latter. There is a better division of labor aboard the English man-of-war, and every man is bound under penalty of death to strict obedience to orders. Give to one man a rope, and he holds it without starting from his post, doing nothing but standing ready for further orders. Aboard the French vessel, every sailor is so eager to fight, that he quits his proper station to assist his neighbor. Hence the movements of the English vessel immediately follow the word of command, because the sailors stand ready to obey it. While the French Captain is rallying his men that they may receive the word, the Englishman has already obtained the advantage of her in position. The lively disposition of the French people renders them incapable of submitting to strict discipline. They want to be doing a little more than is assigned them, and while doing this they neglect their own part.

Turkish Costume.—The embroidered vests, the clustering jewels, the rich furs, the Cashmere shawls, the costly turbans, and the flowing robes, which from all antiquity has been the costume of the Turk, is fast giving way to other fashions, and by and by a "grand Turk" will be found nowhere but at a masquerade. In Constantinople, at the present day, the only inhabitants who retain the costume of other days, are the Jews, the Greeks, the Armenians, and a few Dervishes; and the common dress now, is a coarse red sugar-loaf cap, crowned with a ragged bunch of purple silk roivings; dark woollen trousers, much after the fashion of our workhouse lower-extremity-cases, and a coarse brown frock-coat buttoned up to the chin with metal buttons, innocent of all gilding, and marvellously tarnished. Even the red slippers and yellow morocco boots have been cast aside from the legs and feet of the Moslem, and they now envelope their understandings in Wellington boots. The official regulations have indeed respected the beard; yet even the beard has undergone a revolution, and the young Effendis now hardly ever wear it. It is in fact following the fate of the turban.

One of the old regime—for here, as well as in France we have now the old regime and the maurs de la revolution—observing that it was a great pity to overload the kingdom with Peers, by creating a majority in the House of Lords, a notorious wily replied, "Oh, but we shall select such Peers as have wives who are not likely to have children, and perpetuate the Peerage." "Hem!" said the Tory, "then their title should be Barren and Barrenness."

A certain noble lord, whose attentions to the gentler sex have lately met their reward in his union with a fair widow, was, previously to that event, so assiduous and empress in his suit, or rather suits, preferred in various quarters, as to have acquired from the ladies the soubriquet of the Solicitor General.

Service.—Since the story of a lady's maid, who turned out to be a male felon returned from transportation, there seems to be some mystery in the affair of domestic service. For instance, in the Times of Monday, among the "want places," we read, "As chambermaid or housemaid, at an inn or coffee-house, in town or country, a man who can have twelve months character from her last place: direct," &c. &c.

FOR SALE OR TO BE LET.—In South Boston, 200,000 feet of Flats, with 600 feet of water privileges on the channel, nearly opposite the Franklin Bank, to be sold or to be let for several years, on very moderate terms. The said Flats might be made very valuable and useful for rope works, wharves, dock yards, &c., it being about 1000 feet from the Old South Bridge, and will be of great utility for loading for fuel, coal, timber, brick, lime, and every material employed in the building of that improving part of Boston. COUCH STREET.—Notice is hereby given to all persons interested, that the Mayor and Aldermen on Monday next, at 10 o'clock, P. M. at their room, City Hall, will take into consideration the expediency of laying a Common Sewer from Greenough street to Morris street, and assessing the expense thereof upon those whose estates shall be benefited thereby. Any person objecting to the same may then and there be heard.

By order of the Mayor and Aldermen, S. F. MCLEARY, City Clerk. j17

THRASHING MACHINE.—The subscriber respectfully offers to the public a new Thrashing Machine, which he has recently invented, and which for utility, cheapness and simplicity, he can recommend with confidence to their use. The machine, put in operation by a horse and tended by two men, is capable of thrashing grain of all kinds, whether reaped or mowed, and at the same time separates it from the straw—doing the work of twelve men by the ordinary process, per day, without any waste of the grain.

The apparatus by which the machine is put in motion is connected with it, and it is altogether as portable as a horse wagon. Its simplicity is such that it can be built or repaired by most farmers at a small expense.

The superiority of this machine over any other of the kind now in use, consists mainly in the new arrangement which it separates the grain from the head of the sheaf—every grain being effectually separated—which in itself is equivalent to 5 per cent. of the whole quantity thrashed. The head passes through unbroken, but the grain is effectually cleared. As to the cost of execution, it will thrash out as much grain as the most active man can handle, and then the cradle into which it passes is frequently not more than half filled.

The subscriber having secured Letters Patent for the above invention, will sell rights for States, counties, towns, or individual rights, if applied for soon, at the Eastern State House, Ann street, where the machine may be examined. June 8. ep15m WILLIAM LAUGHTON.
